

Foxholes Woodland has a mixture of habitats including woodland, grassland and open spaces with a small ditch along the western edge. The woodland has distinct areas consisting of older woodland with large oaks, hazel coppice with an understorey of honeysuckle and bluebells; in contrast to areas of younger plantation mainly ash, silver birch which were planted as quick growing trees and shrubs to act as a shelter belt from the main road.

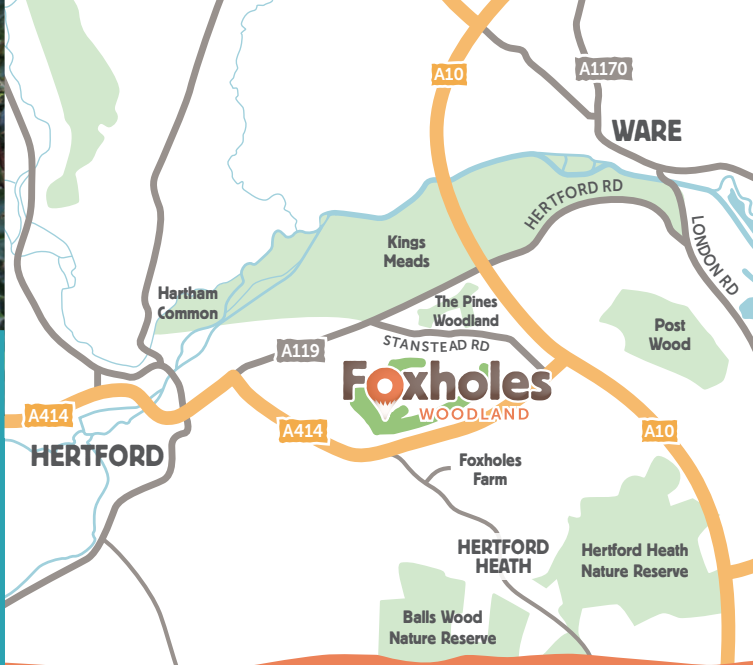

The varied habitats provide homes for a variety of species from birds and mammals to smaller ones such as invertebrates that can be found in wood and leaf litter.

There are two play areas on the site with a variety of equipment for different age groups, all found in a nice woodland setting. These are joined via the surfaced 1.3 mile circular walk around the woodland that links into the local Rights of Way network, providing access into the wider countryside, to local businesses, leisure facilities and other council parks.
